The U.S. Global Climate Research Program released a report last week concluding that climate change is happening now and is already having a significant impact on the United States. Bill McKibben was one of the first voices to warn of climate change—two decades ago, in his 1989 book, The End of Nature. He is still speaking out.

McKibben was born in 1960 in Lexington, Massachusetts, the birthplace of the American Revolution. During his summers in high school, McKibben led tours on the Lexington battlefield telling the story of American democracy and freedom. He says the experience taught him a valuable history lesson.

"I've never confused dissent with the lack of patriotism; if anything, just the opposite. You know the people I was talking about showed their patriotism by dissenting from big power."

After graduating from Harvard with a degree in journalism, McKibben spent several years as a magazine columnist before moving to a remote part of New York State. He says that's where he fell in love with the wild woods.

"And it was striking me very hard, the sudden intuitive understanding that it wasn’t so wild anymore, that people were changing the temperature of that place, and hence the seasons and the flora and the fauna."

That insight was the basis for The End of Nature, the first book on global warming written for a general audience. McKibben says he thought that if he simply pointed out ecological problems, people would do something about them.

46. The passage is mainly about _________.
(A) a very popular book
(B) the climate change in New York
(C) a writer who cares about the environment
(D) the reasons why the wild woods are not so wild now

47. Which of the following can be inferred from the third paragraph?
(A) People may love their country but disagree with the authority.
(B) Bill McKibben agrees with whatever the government officials say.
(C) Some people show their love for their country by reading books.
(D) The big power loved reading Bill McKibben’s columns.

48. Which of the following is true about Bill McKibben?
(A) He became a columnist in 1989.
(B) He does not think that climate change is a serious problem.
(C) He is still expressing concern about the climate change.
(D) He wrote a famous book when he was in high school.

49. What inspired Bill McKibben to write the book The End of Nature?
(A) The battlefield in Lexington
(B) Harvard University
(C) The wild woods in New York State
(D) A magazine he worked for
50. This passage is most probably taken from ________.

(A) a research paper on global warming
(B) a textbook on the wild woods
(C) a guide on how to write a good book
(D) a report on an environmental writer
